Excerpt from State of Connecticut Register and Manual, 1957: Prepared Pursuant to Section 60d, 1955, Supplement to the General Statutes A cherished reminder of our heritage is the old covered bridge. An aerial photograph of one such picturesque bridge, located at West Cornwall on the Housatonic, appears on the opposite page. Similar structures at Kent, and over the Salmon River at East Hampton, originally designed to ease the coming and going of persons, have resisted the onslaughts of man and nature for generations. They serve as mute testimony to the permanence of our foundations and remind us anew of the romance and color of Connecticut's illustrious past, so rich in inspiring tradition. This year, 1957, finds our state designing and building magnificent new bridges which will augment the shining net work of modern spans nourishing the business, industrial and recreational resources of our Constitution State. They will reach across rivers, great and small, pointing the way to a challenging and ever-promising future.
